This is the biggest national health crisis you've never heard of...

The Pacific coastline along the U.S./Mexico border is steeped in rich multi-cultural identities, contains immense biodiversity, and contributes high economic value to both countries. Yet, this region is plagued by severe pollution that threatens public health, limits coastal access, harms ecosystems and wildlife, and jeopardizes local economies.

Every day, millions of gallons of untreated sewage, toxic chemicals, and trash flow through the Tijuana River Watershed at the U.S./Mexico border.

5PM Shorts Program and Feature Film

Paving the Waves

Director: Sophie Simon

Logline: "Paving the Waves" covers the stories of 4 different female surfers born and raised in the 805. We hear how generationally the surf community has been primarily male-dominated, and how it affects the female surfers. The film covers the surf history of Ventura's trailblazer female surfer Mary Monks aka "Mondo's Mary." The females in the film share the challenges they have faced, the inclusion they have yet to see, as well as the small steps they have seen for equality in the water.

Running Time: 13min 25 sec

The Granny Grommets

Director: Leah Rustomjee

Logline: A grommet, in surf lexicon, stands for a surfing newbie, usually a younger person. The Granny Grommets, however, are claiming the term for themselves, ignoring the looming threats of sharks and concerns of their worried offspring, to brace the waves of Albany - bodyboards in tow.

The Granny Grommets, a nearly 90 strong group of women, come from all walks of life and with all the life experiences that an older person brings with them, to bodyboard every Friday morning at Middleton beach in Albany in Western Australia. United by their love of the ocean, the group serves as much more than simply a weekly exercise class, for some it's an escape from caring responsibilities and others a place to feel a sense of identity. This film ultimately reflects on the healing and transformative power community and friendship provide for us later in life.

Running Time: 8 min 59 sec
